Dear <Courtesy> <Last Name>:

In some ways, my career thus far has been very traditional – a BA from MIT followed by an MBA from Harvard and then progression to the executive level in such large corporate giants as Acme and Familetto Healthcare.

But I have always been a person who gets her charge from a challenge, and more importantly, the type of person who doesn't just color outside the lines in efforts to meet those challenges—I want to draw those lines on the page myself.

My DNA is that of an entrepreneur. But as someone who has spent his career in large, corporate environments, I define that term more broadly than most. My brand of entrepreneurship means that I see opportunity where others see a void, I see solutions rather than problems, and no matter how hard it gets I persevere, learning and adapting quickly from mistakes along the way. I am excited by and passionate about opportunities to lead businesses to the next level of success, infusing the teams I lead with energy and focus, and helping them to navigate strategic challenges and to chart new paths to growth.

<Name>, yesterday I was talking with <Name>, a mutual acquaintance of ours, about my career. I am currently an Acme executive who has been tapped for my leadership on a number of strategic initiatives. Most recently that has included:

- Building and leading the first standalone, internal Acme startup in 30 years which I grew into a thriving, global enterprise
- Spearheading turnaround and global growth of a business division that had been "left for dead"
- Transforming disparate, tired product offerings into a single, integrated offering that reinvigorated revenue growth

Now I am ready and eager for my next career challenge, and that was the topic of my conversation with <Name>. <Name> suggested that it might be beneficial for us to talk.

I realize you are busy and want to respect your time. Thus, I have enclosed my résumé to provide you with a quick overview of my credentials, and am requesting just 20 minutes of your time. I recognize that you may not know of a specific opportunity for me. However, I would still greatly value your thoughts and advice regarding my goals and any referrals you might be able to make if you think of someone else I should talk with.

Thank you! I will give you a call in a few days to follow up.

Respectfully,

Katherine Garrett

This is one of the many career marketing documents that are included (along with an executive résumé) in the portfolios I create for my clients. Please note that although this document has been carefully edited to preserve the anonymity of my client, this example was created for a real client. The strategies used in the document were devised specifically for this client, to address unique aspects of this individual's professional history. While the document is protected by United States Copyright law and copying of any or all of the document is strictly forbidden, doing so would not be in your best interest for other reasons. The best and most effective career marketing documents promote your authentic personal brand and unique value proposition, and the content, design, structure, and formatting strategies are derived from these. It will be my honor to work with you to create YOUR executive career marketing portfolio.
